

No. 120

Facets of Shi'ite Islam in Contemporary Southeast Asia (I):
Thailand and Indonesia

Christoph Marcinkowski

Institute of Defence and Strategic Studies Singapore

29 December 2006

With Compliments

This Working Paper series presents papers in a preliminary form and serves to stimulate comment and discussion. The views expressed are entirely the author's own and not that of the Institute of Defence and Strategic Studies

The Institute of Defence and Strategic Studies (IDSS) was established in July 1996 as an autonomous research institute within the Nanyang Technological University. Its objectives are to:

- Conduct research on security, strategic and international issues.
- Provide general and graduate education in strategic studies, international relations, defence management and defence technology.
- Promote joint and exchange programmes with similar regional and international institutions; and organise seminars/conferences on topics salient to the strategic and policy communities of the Asia-Pacific.

Constituents of IDSS include the International Centre for Political Violence and Terrorism Research (ICPVTR), the Centre of Excellence for National Security (CENS) and the Asian Programme for Negotiation and Conflict Management (APNCM).

Research

Through its Working Paper Series, IDSS Commentaries and other publications, the Institute seeks to share its research findings with the strategic studies and defence policy communities. The Institute's researchers are also encouraged to publish their writings in refereed journals. The focus of research is on issues relating to the security and stability of the Asia-Pacific region and their implications for Singapore and other countries in the region. The Institute has also established the S. Rajaratnam Professorship in Strategic Studies (named after Singapore's first Foreign Minister), to bring distinguished scholars to participate in the work of the Institute. Previous holders of the Chair include Professors Stephen Walt (Harvard University), Jack Snyder (Columbia University), Wang Jisi (Chinese Academy of Social Sciences), Alastair Iain Johnston (Harvard University) and John Mearsheimer (University of Chicago). A Visiting Research Fellow Programme also enables overseas scholars to carry out related research in the Institute.

Teaching

The Institute provides educational opportunities at an advanced level to professionals from both the private and public sectors in Singapore as well as overseas through graduate programmes, namely, the Master of Science in Strategic Studies, the Master of Science in International Relations and the Master of Science in International Political Economy. These programmes are conducted full-time and part-time by an international faculty. The Institute also has a Doctoral programme for research in these fields of study. In addition to these graduate programmes, the Institute also teaches various modules in courses conducted by the SAFTI Military Institute, SAF Warrant Officers' School, Civil Defence Academy, and the Defence and Home Affairs Ministries. The Institute also runs a one-semester course on 'The International Relations of the Asia Pacific' for undergraduates in NTU.

Networking

The Institute convenes workshops, seminars and colloquia on aspects of international relations and security development that are of contemporary and historical significance. Highlights of the Institute's activities include a regular Colloquium on Strategic Trends in the 21st Century, the annual Asia Pacific Programme for Senior Military Officers (APPSMO) and the biennial Asia Pacific Security Conference. IDSS staff participate in Track II security dialogues and scholarly conferences in the Asia-Pacific. IDSS has contacts and collaborations with many international think tanks and research institutes throughout Asia, Europe and the United States. The Institute has also participated in research projects funded by the Ford Foundation and the Sasakawa Peace Foundation. It also serves as the Secretariat for the Council for Security Cooperation in the Asia-Pacific (CSCAP), Singapore. Through these activities, the Institute aims to develop and nurture a network of researchers whose collaborative efforts will yield new insights into security issues of interest to Singapore and the region.

ABSTRACT

Recent political events surrounding the Iranian “nuclear crisis”, as well as the still unsettled fate of Iraq have resulted in a renewed interest in the Shi’ite dimension of Islam among political observers. In an earlier IDSS Working Paper, the author has tried to address some issues pertaining to Twelver Shi’ite Islamic thought, as well as conceptual and practical aspects. The present paper on facets of Shi’ite Islam in Thailand and Indonesia is the first of two that try to address the often sharply differing situations faced by Shi’ites in contemporary Southeast Asia. Its sequel will deal with selected issues pertaining to Singapore, and Malaysia.

Dr Christoph Marcinkowski (b. 1964 in Berlin) is an award-winning German scholar in Islamic, Southeast Asian, and Iranian studies and has spent several years in Iran (1984-86) and Malaysia (1995-2004). He had been Senior Research Fellow (1999-2002) and Associate Professor of History (2002-04) at the International Institute of Islamic Thought of Civilization (ISTAC), Kuala Lumpur, and Associate Research Scholar and member of the editorial staff of Encyclopaedia Iranica at the Center for Iranian Studies, Columbia University, New York City (2004-05). Currently, he is Visiting Research Scholar at the Institute of Defence and Strategic Studies (IDSS) at Nanyang Technological University (NTU) as well as Visiting Affiliate at the Asia Research Institute (ARI), National University of Singapore (NUS). He has published widely on issues pertaining to Islamic history and culture in Iran, Iraq, and Southeast Asia.

Dr Marcinkowski is the author of Religion and Politics in Iraq. Shi’ite Clerics between Quietism and Resistance (Singapore, 2004). His eighth and latest book, Shi’ite Islam in Southeast Asia. Basic Concepts, Cultural and Historical Aspects, Contemporary Implications, is forthcoming at Singapore University Press. Presently, he is working on a new book on contacts between Hadramaut in southern Arabia and Southeast Asia.

Facets of Shi'ite Islam in Contemporary Southeast Asia (I): Thailand and Indonesia

Introduction

Islamic studies are still a “sunrise industry”¹ at many Southeast Asian universities. However, recent political events surrounding the Iranian “nuclear crisis”, as well as the still unsettled fate of Iraq, have also in Southeast Asia resulted in a renewed interest in the Shi'ite dimension of Islam among political observers. Shi'ite seminaries in Iran, for instance, have seen since the early 1980 a steadily increasing number of Shi'ite students from Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore, Thailand and the Philippines. As they are a minority among the local Muslims, Southeast Asian Shi'ites are generally more open and receptive to their respective social (often non-Muslim) environment. A better understanding of Shi'ite Islam might thus be beneficial in order to arrive at a more differentiated picture of contemporary Southeast Asian Islam.

The current events in mainly Shi'ite Iraq and Iran should thus also be of concern to policy-makers in Southeast Asia, and this not only because of the possibility of the occurrence of certain “solidarity effects” among Muslims of the region in general. The recent phenomenon of a Shi'ite revival and “conversion” from Sunnism to Shi'ism among Southeast Asian Muslims appears to warrant particular attention in this context. Solid knowledge of the basic concepts of Shi'ism (as distinguishing it from Sunnism), as well as on the nature of Islamic civilization as manifested in this part of the world, are still indispensable in order to arrive at a fact-oriented, less sensational evaluation of current events. The fact of the presence of ¹ I would like to thank my colleague Mr Umej Bhatia, Deputy Director of the Middle East, North Africa and Central Asia Directorate and Head of the Political Islam Study Group at Singapore's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, for conveying to me this rather ingenious expression.

Shi'ism in Southeast Asia in history has to be seen within the context of the course and circumstances of the region's process of Islamization, both of which are still the subject of heated debate among scholars.² To the mind of the present writer, a more holistic approach to the study of Islamic civilization in the Malay-Indonesian archipelago is needed in order to avoid the serious dangers of misinterpreting and dealing out of context with the recent phenomenon of renewed interest in Shi'ism among Muslims in contemporary Southeast Asia.

In an earlier IDSS Working Paper, this writer has tried to address some issues pertaining to Twelver Shi'ite Islamic thought, as well as conceptual and practical aspects.³ The present paper on facets of Shi'ite Islam in Thailand and Indonesia is the first of two that tries to address the often sharply differing situations faced by Shi'ites in contemporary Southeast Asia. Its sequel will deal with selected issues pertaining to Singapore, and Malaysia.

On 'Schools' and 'Rites'

In order to consider the revival of Shi'ite Islam in the Archipelago within the context of Southeast Asian Islamic civilization it has to be kept in mind that the overwhelming majority of the Muslims in Southeast Asia today are Sunnites. In their ² For a good summary of the prevailing (and at times conflicting) theories see Syed Muhammad Naquib al-Attas, Preliminary Statement on a General Theory of the Islamization of the Malay-Indonesian Archipelago (Kuala Lumpur, 1969); idem, "Indonesia. iv-History: (a) Islamic period," in: The Encyclopedia of Islam, new ed., vol. 2, pp. 1218-21; G. W. J. Drewes, "New Light on the Coming of Islam to Indonesia?" in: Readings on Islam in Southeast Asia, ed. Ahmad Ibrahim, Sharon Siddique, and Yasmin Hussain (Singapore, 1990), pp. 7-19; A. Gordon, ed., The Propagation of Islam in the Indonesian-Malay Archipelago (Kuala Lumpur, 2001). I have dealt with the issue of historical Shi'ism in the region in an earlier, somewhat more preliminary study, of which what follows is an extension; see C. Marcinkowski, "Shi'ites in South-East Asia," Encyclopaedia Iranica, New York, Columbia University, forthcoming in print, available online at <http://www.iranica.com/newsite/> (accessed on May 3, 2006). See also my forthcoming Shi'ite Islam in Southeast Asia. Basic Concepts, Cultural and Historical Aspects, Contemporary Implications.

³ C. Marcinkowski, "Twelver Shi'ite Islam: Conceptual and Practical Aspects," IDSS Working Paper no. 114, July 2006 (Singapore, Institute of Defence and Strategic Studies), forthcoming at the time of writing.

theological outlook they are overwhelmingly Ash‘arites.⁴ Ash‘arism can well be considered as ‘mainstream Sunnite theology’. It is named after its originator, Abū ‘l-Hasan al-Ash‘arī (d. 935 C.E.), who is a 10th-century sympathiser of Sunnite theology. It can be seen as a reaction against the extreme rationalism of Mu‘tazilite theology, which was influential in the Middle Ages, during the classical period of Islam.⁵ According to al-Ash‘arī, human reason is second to divine revelation as it is supposed to be unable to distinguish independently between good and evil. It is up to Allāh alone to decide on the goodness or evil of a particular action. For mankind, the only way to receive authentic information on religious truths is through revelation. With regard to the issue of the divine attributes, Ash‘arism affirmed them—although rejecting outright anthropomorphism. This is in sharp contrast to the views held by the Mu‘tazilites (and Twelver Shi‘ites, one has to add) who saw in Qur’anic references to a “Hand of God” and in other physical attributes purely metaphorical expressions. Very famous within the history of Islamic theology is the Ash‘arite notion that the Qur’an –being the “Word of God—is eternal and thus uncreated. This, too, is contrary to the views of the Mu‘tazilites and Twelver Shi‘ites. Apparently, al-Ash‘arī’s main intention was to preserve the notion of God’s omnipotence. However, the continuing tight grip of Ash‘arism over Sunnite theology until this very day is often held responsible for the prevailing determinism in that denomination.

With regard to matters of Islamic law and devotional matters, most of Southeast Asia’s Sunnite Muslims adhere to the Sunnite Shāfi‘ite “school”.⁶ Perhaps ⁴ For a comprehensive study see R. J. McCarthy, ed., The Theology of al-Ash‘ari (Beirut, 1953). A more recent treatment of Ash‘arite theology is D. Gimaret, La doctrine d’ Ash‘ari (Paris, 1990).

⁵ For an introduction see R. C. Martin, M. R. Woodward, and D. S. Atmaja, Defenders of Reason in Islam: Mu‘tazilism from Medieval School to Modern Symbol (Oxford, 1997).

⁶ For the key text of Shāfi‘ite jurisprudence see Majid Khadduri, Islamic Jurisprudence: Shafi‘i’s Risāla (Cambridge, 1987).

“legal rite” would be more in place than “school”,⁷ an expression which is unfortunately still dominating the pertinent literature, in particular in the West. “School” is rather misleading, as it would include also matters of theology, which is not what the Arabic technical term madhhab (plural: madhāhib) conveys. Today, aside from the Shāfi‘ites, only three of those ‘legal rites’ are extant among the Sunnites: The Hanafite rite, usually seen as the most moderate one among the Sunnite rites, is today predominant in Central Asia, Turkey, the Balkans and on the Indian subcontinent (it had been the official rite in the Ottoman Empire, Mughal India, and other Muslim dynasties of Turkic origin); the Mālikites, almost exclusively in North and Northwest Africa; and the Hanbalites (commonly considered the most conservative and strict Sunnite madhhab), mostly on the Arabian Peninsula. Wahhābism, today dominating Saudi Arabia and certain strata of Sunni extremism elsewhere, is not a legal rite but a purist political movement that originated on the Arabian Peninsula in the mid-18th century.⁸

In terms of geographical distribution, Shāfi‘ites are dominating the Malay-Indonesian world (including Singapore, southern Thailand, and the southern Philippines), Egypt, Syria, Jordan, Palestine, and Iraq (as far as the Sunnites there are concerned). Southern India, too, contains Shāfi‘ite pockets. As a matter of fact, the majority of the Muslims there are Shāfi‘ites, a circumstance which is highly relevant when discussing the course of the Islamisation process of Southeast Asia in history. Moreover, it is often forgotten in contemporary discourse that Iran, too, had been one of the centres of Shāfi'ite Sunnite scholarship - prior to the establishment there of Twelver Shi'ism as 'religion of state' in Iran in 1501 under the Safavid dynasty.

⁷ For an authoritative history of those “legal rites” in Islam see Muhammad Abū Zahrā, Ta’rīkh al-madhāhib al-fiqhiyyah [History of the Islamic legal rites] (Cairo, n.d.) (in Arabic). See now also P. Bearman, R. Peters, and F. E. Vogel, eds., The Islamic School of Law. Evolution, Devolution, and Progress (Cambridge MA, 2006).

⁸ For recent comprehensive treatments of Wahhābism with evaluations that differ widely from each other see Hamid Algar, Wahhābism: A Critical Essay (Oneonta NY, 2002), and Natana J. Delong-Bas, Wahhābi Islam: From Revival and Reform to Global Jihad (New York, 2004).

However, it is not so much the question of 'legal matters' or 'rite' that sets Sunnites and Shi'ites apart.⁹ As a matter of fact, the Shāfi'ite and ja'farī "schools" – the 'legal rite' of Twelver Shi'ism—are perhaps closer to each other than the Sunnite "schools" among themselves. They differ, however, in their approach towards the issue of religious and political authority, and above all - to the mind of the present author—towards the essential meaning and place of religion and spirituality in general.

Throughout Islamic history, Ash'arite theology, which now permeates and dominates Sunnite Islam, tended to be more acquiescent towards the respective political system, that is to say, the one or other dynasty of the day whose main argument had been military power. The further implications of this circumstance are beyond the scope of the present study which focuses on Shi'ite Islam. Nevertheless, it should be noted here in passing that the recent "activities" of the Al Qaeda terrorist network and its off-shots throughout the Sunni Muslim arena are also highly significant within the context of Islamic theology as they explicitly target Sunni regimes which are branded by them 'un-Islamic' or 'not Islamic enough'. From the perspective of the history of classical Sunni theology and "orthodox" Sunni political thought, however, this kind of attitude towards established political power constitutes certainly an 'innovation'.

The author would like to close this brief introduction to the issue of "legal schools" by referring to the late Mahmūd Shaltūt (1893-1963), a leading Sunni Egyptian scholar. From 1958 to 1963, Shaltūt had been the Shaykh or Grand Imām, i.e. the leader, of Al-Azhar University, one of the main centers of Sunni scholarship in the world, but actually founded in the 10th century by the Fatimids—a Shi’ite Ismā‘īlī dynasty. Shaltūt, as head of of Al-Azhar one of the most respected authorities in Sunni Islam, is particularly remembered for introducing the teaching of Zaydite and Twelver Shi’ite fiqh to the university alongside the jurisprudence of the four ‘recognized’ Sunni madhāhib or ‘legal schools’.¹⁰ He was also involved in a dialogue movement with Shi’ite Islam, known as taqrīb al-madhāhib. The leading Iraqi Shi’ite scholar Shaykh Muhammad Husayn Âl Kāshif al-Ghitā (1877-1954) was part of that movement as well. Concern for social aspects, a deeply felt conviction that sectarian conflicts are essentially a sociological phenomenon, as well as an appreciation of the value of comparative jurisprudence in the study of law, might have moved Shaltūt into the direction of a Sunni-Shi’ite rapprochement which resulted in the famous religious verdict (fatwā) that was issued by him in July 1959 and announced on July 6 of that year. The text of the fatwā is worth to be quoted here in full. It is self-explanatory and runs as follows:

⁹ For a good comparative study see Muhammad Jawād Mughniyyah, Al-Fiqh 'alā 'l-madhāhib al-khamsah [Islamic law according to the five legal rites] (Beirut, 1402 AH/1960) (in Arabic), which is, to my knowledge, still not available in English translation.

“His Excellency [Shaltūt] was asked:

‘Some believe that, for a Muslim to have religiously correct worship and dealing, it is necessary to follow one of the four known [Sunnite] legal schools, whereas the Twelver Shi’ite (al-Shī‘ah al-Imāmiyyah) school is not one of them nor the Zaydite (al-Shī‘ah al-Zaydiyyah). Do your Excellency agree with this opinion, and prohibit following the ¹⁰ On the issue of Shaltūt and Sunnite-Shi’ite rapprochement during the 1950s see also F. R. C. Bagley, “The Azhar and Shiism,” Muslim World 50 (1960), pp. 122-29, and K. Zebiri, “Shaykh Mahmud Shaltut: Between Tradition and Modernity,” Journal of Islamic Studies 2, no. 2 (1991), pp. 210-24.

Twelver Shi'ite (al-Shī'ah al-Imāmiyyah al-Ithnā 'Ashariyyah) school of thought, for example?'

His Excellency replied:

'(1) Islam does not require a Muslim to follow a particular legal school (madhhab). Rather, we say: every Muslim has the right to follow one of the schools of thought which has been correctly narrated and its verdicts have been compiled in its books. And, everyone who is following such madhāhib [legal schools] can transfer to another school, and there shall be no crime on him for doing so.

(2) The ja'farī legal school, which is also known as the Twelver Shi'ite (al-Shī'ah al-Imāmiyyah al-Ithnā 'Ashariyyah) school is a school that is religiously correct to follow in worship as are other Sunnite schools. Muslims must know this and ought to refrain from unjust prejudice to any particular school, since the religion of Allah and His Divine Law (sharī'ah) were never restricted to a particular legal school. Their jurists (mujtahidūn) are accepted by Almighty Allah, and it is permissible to the "non-mujtahid" to follow them and to accord with their teaching whether in acts of worship ('ibādāt) or [social] transactions (mu'āmalāt)."¹¹

¹¹ "Al-Azhar Verdict (Fatwa) on the Shia", available online at <http://www.geocities.com/Tokyo/Spa/7220/azhar.html> (accessed on July 3, 2006, transliteration and spellings of technical terms corrected and adjusted and translation upgraded by the present writer).

In the following, we shall have a look on manifestations of Twelver Shi'ite Islam in contemporary Thailand. Elsewhere, I have tried to address some aspects of the historical presence of Shi'ism in Thailand, especially in the Ayutthaya period.¹²

Thailand: A Tiny Minority with a Great History

The *CIA World Factbook*¹³ on June 2006, states that Thailand's population figure was at 64,631,595 and the percentage of Muslims in the kingdom at a rather low 4.6%, vis-à-vis 94.6% Buddhists. Here is not the place to discuss these figures, although perhaps the actual Muslim percentage might be up to 10%. More importantly, the Muslim community of present-day Thailand, although not ethnically homogeneous, is culturally dominated by southern Thailand's Malays who adhere firmly to the Sunni Shāfi'ite legal school.¹⁴ Their cultural and religious perspective is directed towards neighbouring Malaysia and the Arab world, rather than toward Iran or India as it was ¹² See C. Marcinkowski, From Isfahan to Ayutthaya. Contacts between Iran and Siam in the 17th Century, with a foreword by Professor Ehsan Yarshater, Columbia University (Singapore, 2005).

¹³ Central Intelligence Agency, The World Factbook, available online at <http://www.cia.gov/cia/publications/factbook/geos/th.html> (accessed on June 27, 2006).

¹⁴ RISEAP [Regional Islamic Da'wah Council of Southeast Asia and the Pacific] (ed.), Muslim Almanach Asia Pacific, pp. 206-20 (on Thailand); Farouk Omar, "The Muslims of Thailand: A Survey," in: Andrew D. W. Forbes, ed., The Muslims of Thailand, 2 vols, Gaya (Bihar/India), 1988, vol. 1, pp. 1-30. For general accounts of the history of Islam in Thailand see M. Gilquin (tr. M. Smithies), The Muslims of Thailand (Chiangmai, 2005). Important sources in Thai language are Khatchatphai Burutsaphat, Thai mutsalim [Thai Muslims] (Bangkok, 1976), and Kukrit Pramoj, "Khwaam pen ma khong mutsalim nai prathet thai" [History of the Muslims in Thailand], Warasan Chumchon Chula 22, no. 3 (23 October 1970), pp. 19-40. For introductions to the "problem" of Islam in Southern Thailand, in other parts of the kingdom and on other social issues see C. Kersten, "The Predicament of Thailand's Southern Muslims," American Journal of Islamic Social Sciences 21, no. 4 (2004), pp. 1-29, W. Kraus, "Islam in Thailand. Notes on the History of Muslim Provinces, Thai Islamic Modernism and the Separatist Movement in the South," Journal of the Institute of Muslim Minority Affairs 5, no. 2 (July 1984), pp. 410-25, R. Scupin, "The Socio-Economic Status of Muslims in Central and North Thailand," Journal of the Institute of Muslim Minority Affairs 3, no. 2 (Winter 1981), pp. 162-89, idem, "Muslims in South Thailand: A Review Essay," Journal of the Institute of Muslim Minority Affairs 9, no. 2 (July 1988), pp. 404-19, and Arong Suthasasna, "Occupational Distribution of Muslims in Thailand: Problems and Prospects," Journal of the Institute of Muslim Minority Affairs 5, no. 1 (January 1984), pp. 234-42. An interesting introduction to traditional religious education among Southern Thai (Sunnite) Muslims is Hasan Madmarin. The Pondok and Madrasah in Patani (Bangi, Selangor/Malaysia, 2002, 2nd printing). See also W. K. Che Man, The Administration of Islamic Institutions in Non-Muslim States: The Case of Singapore and Thailand (Singapore, 1991) and C. Marcinkowski, "'Kidnapping' Islam? Some Thoughts on Southern Thailand's Muslim Community between Ethnocentrism and Constructive Conflict Solution," available online at <http://mis-pattani.pn.psu.ac.th/registra/grade/temp/speech/20020823/Panel18%5B1%5D.htm> (accessed on February 23, 2006, also forthcoming in print).

the case during the Ayutthaya period. The main historical factor behind the dominance of Sunnite Islam among the Muslims of contemporary Thailand seems to be—aside from the end of the ‘Persian intermezzo’ during the Ayutthaya period—the incorporation in 1902 of the four southern princely states of Narathiwat, Pattani, Yala, and Satun into the administrative framework of the kingdom, resulting in Islam becoming the country’s largest minority religion.¹⁵ The dominance of Sunnite Islam resulted also in 1945 in the appointment of a Sunnite chularajmontri instead of the previous Shi’ite ones who had been members of the Bunnag family and as such descendants of ‘Shaykh Ahmad of Qum’, the pivotal Persian immigrant scholar and merchant favoured by the Ayutthaya kings and raised by them to the highest administrative positions.¹⁶ Despite the end of the ‘Shi’ite dominance’ after the end of the Ayutthaya kingdom in the middle of the 18th century, Shi’ite Muslims, mostly ethnic Pathans, but also new Thai and ethnic Malay ‘converts’ continue to live in the kingdom. Shi’ites are now merely an insignificant minority in metropolitan Bangkok which, perhaps, comes to a surprise to most given the great history of Shi’ism in Thailand in the Ayutthaya period. Although it is impossible to give any numbers, local sources from the Thai Shi’ite community I have spoken to put the number of Shi’ites in Thailand at “about one percent of the country’s Muslim population”, which would result in several ten thousands, depending on which population figures one is basing an assessment. According to the U.S. Department of State, Thailand’s

¹⁵ Imtiyaz Yusuf, “Islam and Democracy in Thailand: Reforming the Office of Chularajmontri/Shaykh al-Islām,” Journal of Islamic Studies 9 (1998), p. 284.

¹⁶ Ibid. See on the 1997 reorganization of the office of chularajmontri also Teerapol Arunakasikorn et. al., The Royal Act on Islamic Organization Administration (Bangkok, 1999), Division 1, Articles 6-10, pp. 9-12 (in Thai, unfortunately, I had no access to this work which is quoted in Chaiwat Satha-Anand, “Praying in the Rain: the Politics of Engaged Muslims in Anti-War Protest in Thai Society,” Pacifica Review: Peace, Security & Global Change 16, no. 2 (June 2004), p. 161, n. 44).

“[...] Religious Affairs Department (RAD) reports that there are 3,479 registered mosques in 64 provinces, with the largest number in Pattani Province. The majority of these mosques are associated with the Sunni branch of Islam. The remainders, estimated by the RAD to be from 1 to 2 percent of the total, are associated with the Shi‘a branch of Islam.”¹⁷

At any rate, Shi’ite life in modern Thailand seems to be dominated entirely by the Iranian embassy in Bangkok and its Cultural Centre, in spite of the presence of the rather quietist ‘As-Sayyid Al-Khoei (Al-Sayyid al-Khū’ī) Centre’¹⁸ in the same city. This author tried to find out more about the Al-Khū’ī Centre but have been told that it was no longer active. Ayatollah Sayyid Abū ‘l-Qāsim al-Khū’ī (1899-1992) was perhaps one of the most respected Najaf-based Shi’ite quietist scholars of the 20th century. He was fervently dedicated to establishing under his name welfare, social, cultural, and educational institutions for Muslims worldwide, such as in London, New York, Lebanon, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Thailand.

The Iranian embassy (located at 602 Sukhumvit Road—between Soi 22 and 24—Klongtoey, Wattana, Bangkok 10110) tries to promote a for Iran ‘favourable environment’ by convening conferences and publishing Classical Persian literature in Thai translation, such as the works of the mystical poets Hāfīz, Sa‘dī, Rūmī, and others. Shaykh Ahmad and the history of the long-standing historical presence of Iranians in Siam, for instance, has been the subject of several conferences in ¹⁷ U.S. Department of State, Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, “International Religious Freedom Report 2005: Thailand,” available online at <http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2005/51531.htm> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

¹⁸ I would like to thank my friend Khun Adul Dantakean, Editor in the Nation Multimedia Group, Bangna, Bangkok, for forwarding this information to me.

Thailand—mostly in conjunction with several local universities. The Cultural Center of the Iranian embassy (located separately from the embassy building at 12 Sukhumvit Road, Soi 29, Klongtoey, Wattana, Bangkok 10110) houses on its compound a ‘Shaykh Ahmad Qumi Library’ with mostly religious books and publications on Iran and its history and culture. The Cultural Centre was always actively involved in the organization of those conferences: the first was held in 1994 at Ayutthaya’s Historical Study Centre. It resulted in the publication of a proceedings volume in Thai, somewhat limited in academic and editorial quality, with selected English abstracts.¹⁹ Another meeting, attended by the present writer and somewhat similar in character, took place on March 1, 2003, at the Asia-Pacific Institute of Bangkok’s Srinakharinwirot University under the title “Conference on the Thai-Iranian Relations: Past-Present-Future”.²⁰ A third conference that was also attended by this author, entitled “International Conference on the Effects of Persian Sufism on Southeast Asia”. It was jointly organized by Bangkok’s Catholic Assumption University and the Iranian embassy, and was held on February 7-8, 2004. A proceedings volume of this event was published in the course of the same year.²¹ Lastly, the Iranian embassy organized the fourth meeting under the headline “Conference on Shaykh Ahmad Ghomi”, which took place in Bangkok from November 23-24, 2005, mainly thought as an official commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Iran and the Kingdom of Thailand in 1955. It is worth noting that Thailand was apparently the first ¹⁹ Cultural Center of the Islamic Republic of Iran [Bangkok] (ed.), Sheikh Ahmad Qomi and the History of Siam (Bangkok, 1995/2538 Buddhist Era).

²⁰ Apparently, a proceedings volume of this conference was published by the Cultural Centre of the Iranian Embassy but I have been unable to verify this.

²¹ Imtiyaz Yusuf (ed.), Measuring the Effects of Iranian Mysticism in Southeast Asia (Bangkok, 2004).

Southeast Asian country with which Iran re-established permanent diplomatic relations during Iran's Pahlavī period (1925-79).²²

As witnessed by this author on various occasions during his visits to Bangkok, most of the members of the Thai staff working at the Iranian embassy appear to be former seminarians of the Twelver Shi'ite study centres in Iran, such as Qum. With some of them, the present writer was able to converse fluently with in Persian. Most of them are rather "unconditional" adherents of Iran and its current political system. Because of this, they often find themselves in isolation vis-à-vis their Sunni compatriots and have almost nothing in common with the Southerners and their struggle for more autonomy.

In terms of 'security concerns' from the part of the Thai government it might be stated that so far, Shi'ites have not been singled out as distinct from their Sunni brethren, as the Muslims in the kingdom are generally seen as part of the 'southern problem', i.e. ethnic Malay separatism. This might change in case of an escalation of the Iran-Iraq 'issue'—which involves the United States, Thailand's closest ally. In that scenario we might see a repetition of the events of the 1980s which saw 'the Shi'ites' worldwide portrayed and singled out as 'potential security risks' and 'walking time bombs'. This, by the way, might not only be the case with regard to Thailand. On the other hand, for the future, this author cannot foresee any changes with regard to the reliance of Thailand's Shi'ites on Iran as the funding of Shi'ite cultural and religious activities seems to depend almost entirely on that country.

Finally, it should be mentioned here only in passing that Shi'ite as well as Persian cultural influences are apparently also still detectible in neighbouring Myanmar, formerly known as Burma. Mergui and Tenasserim, located in the deep south of that country, belonged once—from the second half of the 15th century onwards—to the Siamese Ayutthaya kingdom. Both cities had been important harbour cities which attracted in the past also Shi'ite and Persian merchants to settle down there. Apparently, their descendents are still present in Myanmar, since the author has been informed by Mr Mohammed Rosli b. Hassan, the leader of Singapore's Shi'ite community (who shall be referred to again in the sequel to this article), that Burmese Muslims once visited him at his mosque and recited supplications in Persian, although they had not been able to understand their meaning or to have a conversation in that language.

²² For a brief account of Thai-Iranian relations see C. Marcinkowski, "Thailand-Iranian Relations," Encyclopaedia Iranica, New York, Columbia University, forthcoming in print, available online at <http://www.iranica.com/newsite/> (accessed on May 3, 2006).

Shi'ites in Secular Indonesia

Research on Shi'ite Islam in contemporary Indonesia would certainly warrant a separate study. Some work has already been carried out,²³ and the Indonesian academic journal Ulumul Qur'an, for instance, even dedicated on the issue an exclusive volume to which leading Indonesian and international scholars have contributed.²⁴ What follows is thus just thought to stimulate some interest in further research.

²³ See, for instance, Syed Farid Alatas, "The Tarīqat al-'Alawiyah and the Emergence of the Shi'i School in Indonesia and Malaysia," Oriente Moderno 18 (1999), pp. 323-39; Azyumardi Azra, "Syi'ah di Indonesia: Tinjauan ulang" (Shi'ism in Indonesia: A Reconsideration), Pelita, 11 December 1990 (in Indonesian), and B. Baried, "Le shi'isme en Indonésie," Archipel 15 (1978), pp. 65-84. See also A. Rahman Zainuddin (with M. Hamdan Basyar), Syi'ah dan politik di Indonesia (Shi'ism in Indonesia) (Bandung, 2000) (in Indonesian).

²⁴ Ulumul Qur'an, Jurnal Ilmu dan Kebudayaan (Jakarta), 6, no. 4 (1995). Of particular interest are the following articles therein (all in Indonesian): Azyumardi Azra, "Syi'ah di Indonesia: antara mitos dan reality," (Shi'ism in Indonesia: between myth and reality), pp. 4-19; idem, "Lembaga-lembaga Syi'ah di Indonesia" (Shi'ite organizations in Indonesia), pp.20-26; Shahla Haeri, "Perkahwinan mut'ah dan improvisasi budaya" (Mut'ah marriage and the improvisation of culture), pp.46-85; Fauzul Iman, "Posisi marja' taqlid dalam Syia'ah Imamiyah," (The position of the marja' taqlid in Twelver Shi'ite Islam), pp.86-91; Jalaluddin Rakhmat, "Dikotomi Sunni-Syi'ah tidak relevan lagi" (The Sunnite-Shi'ite dichotomy is not relevant anymore), pp. 92-103 (the last article consists actually of an interview which is also available online at <http://media.isnet.org/islamEtc/DikotomiSS1.html>, accessed on July 5, 2006).

As the author tried to show elsewhere,²⁵ Shi'ite Islam has also a long-standing historical footing in what is now Indonesia and 'philosophical Sufism' and the wujūdiyyah movement in 17th century Aceh as well as the hikayat genre of classical Malay literature had strong Shi'ite undercurrents. Shi'ite-inspired festivals are still encountered in the Archipelago, even if many of their mostly Sunnite participants might not be aware of their origins. As in the case of Malaysia, Thailand and Singapore, however, the recent interest in and revival of Shi'ite Islam in Indonesia from the early 1980s onwards has to be seen within the impact of the Iranian revolution of 1979 on the Muslim world at large. Shi'ite life in Indonesia appears to be mostly concentrated on Java, especially in the capital Jakarta, but also in Bandung, and Surabaya. Given the fact that Indonesia is the country with the largest number of Muslims in the world,²⁶ and given also the extent of opportunities for Shi'ites to organize themselves under the present political system, the number of Shi'ites in the country, too, might be much higher in proportion when compared with some other countries in the region. There are no official statistics, but Hong Kong's Asia Times Online, in an article on Iraq-based Grand Ayatollah Sīstānī, published on August 31, 2005, gives the figure "3 to 4 million [Shi'ites] in Southeast Asia", based one of Sīstānī's close aides in Qum.²⁷ Although those figures appear to be highly exaggerated and tell us nothing about the actual commitment of the followers, they seem to be somehow confirmed by the US State Department which in its annual International Religious Freedom Report for 2005 states that "there are between 1 and 3 million Shi'a practitioners nationwide".²⁸ This would make Indonesia the spearhead of Shi'ite Islam in Southeast Asia, taking into account the persecution faced by Shi'ite Muslims in Malaysia, and their rather limited number in other parts of the region. Although there are no statistics available, one would perhaps not be too wrong to see the democratization process in post-Suharto Indonesia as the main reason for the comparatively high number of Shi'ites in that country. Consequently, we find Indonesian Shi'ite organizations often cooperating with the movement usually referred to as "Liberal Islam",²⁹ although not necessarily agreeing to all its practical interpretations or its worldview.

²⁵ See Marcinkowski, From Isfahan to Ayutthaya. Contacts between Iran and Siam in the 17th Century, chapter 2.

²⁶ In July 2006, it was estimated that the number of Indonesia's population was approaching about 245.5 million, of which 88% had been Muslim; see Central Intelligence Agency, The World Factbook, available online at <http://www.cia.gov/cia/publications/factbook/geos/id.html> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

²⁷ P. Escobar, "Waiting for the Mahdi, Part 1: Sistani, Qom: In the Wired Heart of Shi'ism," available online at http://www.atimes.com/atimes/Middle_East/GH31Ak03.html (accessed on July 5, 2005).

As the present author observe when living in Iran from 1984 to 1986, Indonesian Shi'ites - in most cases neophytes – studied en masse at the seminaries at Qum, especially at the Madrasah-ye Hujjatiyyah. During a visit to Qum in early 2000, the author noticed that this school was still hosting exclusively international students. Within the Indonesian context, under the Suharto regime the country's Shi'ites had been considered as a major threat to the state. As the author was told in the 1980s during my stay in Iran, most of them were forced to practice taqiyyah in the face of state persecution. Their situation then might thus have been similar to that still faced by their Malaysian brethren, although for different reasons. Whereas in Malaysia the main concerns of the government of that country appear to have been in terms of 'dangers to Malay unity' and 'orthodox creed', in Indonesia Shi'ism –perceived as a 'revolutionary movement' rather than a quietist one—was seen as a threat to the stability of the Suharto regime, just as any other oppositional group. In the words of ²⁸ US Department of State, Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, "International Religious Freedom Report 2005: Indonesia," available online at <http://72.14.235.104/search?q=cache:25du1FJhRdgJ:www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2005/51512.htm+indonesia+shi%27a&hl=en&gl=sg&ct=clnk&cd=4> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

²⁹ See Liberal Islam Network, "About Liberal Islam," available online at <http://islamlib.com/en/aboutus.php> (accessed on July 6, 2006).

Martin van Bruinessen, Professor of Islamic Studies at Utrecht University and at Leiden's International Institute for the Study of Islam in the Modern World (ISIM),

“Shi’ism came to be singled out as a major threat from the 1980s on, when the effects of the Iranian revolution made themselves felt in Indonesia. Dozens of anti-Shi’a books and pamphlets, in which Shi’ism is frequently depicted as a Jewish invention, were printed and widely distributed”.³⁰

However, in the Indonesia of the post-Suharto era, the country’s Shi’ites appear to benefit from the general climate of political liberalization, although only the future will reveal the extent to which they will be able to profit from it.³¹ Shi’ites are now actively involved in intellectual exchange with other Indonesians. In an interesting interview with the journal Ulumul Qur’an, Shi’ite intellectual and perhaps currently the leading Shi’ite scholar of the country, Jalaluddin Rakhmat (also known as “Kang Jalal”),³² defines Indonesian Shi’ism rather in terms of an intellectual movement rather than a revolutionary one.³³ Rakhmat is heading the Ikatan Jamaah Ahlulbait Indonesia (IJABI), a Java-based Shi’ite association with many outlets all over the country. IJABI is very active in the publications sector and the organizing

³⁰ M. van Bruinessen, “Post-Soeharto Muslim Engagements with Civil Society and Democratization,” paper presented at the Third International Conference and Workshop “Indonesia in Transition”, organised by the Royal Dutch Academy of Sciences (Koninklijke Nederlandse Akademie van Wetenschappen, KNAW) and Labsosio, Universitas Indonesia, held at Universitas Indonesia, Depok, n. 1. The paper had only been available to me online at www.knaw.nl/indonesia/transition/workshop/2004_4.pdf (accessed on July 5, 2006).

³¹ For a good introduction to Islamic politics in Indonesia during the post-Suharto period see Arskal Salim and Azyumardi Azra, eds. Sharia and Politics in Modern Indonesia (Singapore, 2004), and Bahtiar Effendy, Islam and the State in Indonesia (Singapore, 2003).

³² For some of his publications see Ekuator. Indonesian Book Gallery, “Jalaluddin Rahmat,” available online at <http://www.ekuator.com/index.p?see=katalog&penulis=Jalaluddin%20Rahmat> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

³³ Jalaluddin Rakhmat, “Mayoritas Syi’ah di Indonesia adalah Syi’ah intelektual,” available online at <http://free.prohosting.com/~anands/jalal.htm> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

of conferences as well as in dialogue and rapprochement with the Sunnites and other religious communities in the country.³⁴ Sunnite scholars, too, such as Professor Azyumardi Azra, a leading Indonesian scholar on Islam and Professor of History as well as Rector of the Syarif Hidayatullah State Islamic University in Jakarta, have published on Shi'ism in the same journal.³⁵

Shi'ite educational life, too, appears to be thriving now.³⁶ Several Shi'ite organizations in the country are active in the educational sector and are currently experiencing an unprecedented flourishing. Only some of them can be referred here. Shi'ites are now able to maintain several institutions of higher learning of their own, such as SMS Plus Muthahhari in Bandung which was established in the 1990s and named after the late Iranian Ayatollah Mutahharī.³⁷ Perhaps the most interesting project so far is that of the Islamic College for Advanced Studies (ICAS) in Jakarta. Currently, the college offers Bachelor Degrees in Islamic Studies as well as Masters Degrees in Islamic Philosophy and Islamic Mysticism, respectively. In the estimation of the present writer the college is supported by khums funds from 'quietist' clerics such as Grand Ayatollah Sīstānī, but this assertion, of course, remains to be proven. What makes it an interesting project is that it does go beyond the usual madrasah-like type of education. The college describes itself as a twinning program kind of ³⁴ IJABI's website is available at <http://www.ijabi.org/> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

³⁵ See "Select Bibliography: Printed Sources".

³⁶ New information might be gleaned from Zulkifli, "The Education of Indonesian Shi'i Leaders," unpublished paper presented on Friday, 20 May, 2005, at the Workshop on the Education of Southeast Asian Islamic Leadership, held from May 19-20, 2005, at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies (ISEAS), Singapore. Unfortunately, I had no access to this paper. I am grateful to my colleague Ms Faizah bte. Abdul Samat, Research Analyst at IDSS, for this information. In another, very brief paper, Mr Zulkifli provides the interesting information that the first Indonesian students arrived at Qum as early as in 1965; see Zulkifli, "Seeking Knowledge unto Qum: The Education of Indonesian Shi'i ustadhs," available online at http://72.14.235.104/search?q=cache:FjapPURUicJ:www.iias.nl/iias/show/id%3D51940/frameid%3D42832+zulkifli+Leiden+IIAS+PHD&hl=en&g_l=sg&ct=clnk&cd=1 (accessed on July 10, 2006). Mr Zulkifli is a PhD student at the Department of Languages and Cultures of Southeast Asia and Oceania, Leiden University/IIAS, the Netherlands.

³⁷ For their website see "SMS Plus Muthahhari," available online at <http://www.smuth.net/> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

institution that tries to address the challenges and opportunities offered to contemporary Muslims by globalization. On its website reads:

“[The] Islamic College for Advanced Studies (ICAS) is a dynamic college providing higher Islamic education in the field of Islamic studies. Founded in 1999 in London, ICAS grew rapidly and founded three branches in New York (2000), Ghana (2001), and Jakarta (2002). The College is designed for those who desire to become soldiers in developing New Islamic Civilization. ICAS has conceived the contemporary world evolution meeting the new and deeper challenges that demand on deep concern, insights, wisdom and broad vision including profound religious thought.

The college considers that philosophical and rational approaches in religious studies, especially Islamic studies, are useful for the above-mentioned aim. ICAS provides a good opportunity for those who are interested to continue their academic development to do MA. ICAS does have adequate facilities for MA degrees. It is providing higher Islamic education in the fields of: Islamic philosophy, Islamic mysticism, and religion and science. We are proud of our highly qualified lecturer and academic staff, library, computer and internet facilities, research facilities, and other technical facilities. We see ourselves as a caring, friendly but serious and well disciplined institution.

[...] The college strives for excellence and achievement in academic and extra academic fields. In order to obtain a more global insight, ICAS has established a linkage with other institutions both in Indonesia and abroad. Since its establishment, it has secured cooperation with some universities such as Middlesex University London and Baleshti University Tehran. In Indonesia, ICAS secured cooperation with Paramadina University Jakarta, Center for Religious and Cross-Cultural Studies (CRCS) of Gadjah Mada University Yogyakarta, UIN Syarif Hidayatullah Jakarta, STF Diryarkara Jakarta, Mizan Publisher Bandung, Teraju Publisher Jakarta and others.”³⁸

Among the other Shi'ite educational organizations is the already earlier referred to Fatimah Islamic Organization or Yayasan Fatimah in Jakarta, which features a rich library of Shi'ism related books, mainly in Indonesian, Arabic and English, and many of them apparently available online through their website.³⁹ Another association is the Al-Jawad Foundation of Islamic Studies (Yayasan Pendidikan Islam Al-Jawad) in Bandung, West Java. Its head had been Husein Muhammad Al-Kaff, apparently a member of the Indonesian Hadhrami Arab community of which the Al-Kaff family is a prominent member, as can be gleaned from an appeal for help to donors for the renovation of their mosque.⁴⁰ As the website has not been updated for quite some time, it is impossible to state whether he is still charge. The Al-Jawad Foundation used to publish a religious bulletin, the back issues of which are available online on their website. In its political orientation, the foundation as a whole seems to be on the official line of Iran.

³⁸ See Islamic College for Advanced Studies ICAS -in Jakarta, “The Scientific Centre for Islamic Philosophy and Mysticism,” available online at http://www.icas-indonesia.org/index.php?option=com_content&task=section&id=4&Itemid=104&lang=iso-8859-1 (accessed on July 6, 2006).

³⁹ For their website see “Yayasan Fatimah (Fatimah Islamic Organization),” available online at http://www.fatimah.org/pustaka/inggris_penerbit_a.htm (accessed on March 17, 2006).

⁴⁰ For their website see Al-Jawad Foundation of Islamic Studies, “Yayasan Pendidikan Islam Al-Jawad,” available at <http://aljawad.tripod.com/> (accessed on July 6, 2006).

The Iranian embassy is located in central Jakarta and hosts a website.⁴¹ It is surprising that, although there are several pages on it that address matters pertaining to Iranian culture, such as information on arts and architecture, tourism and economy, the usual somewhat apologetic references to the religion of Islam, so familiar with regard to Iran's other embassies in the Muslim world, are apparently entirely missing. It appears that Jakarta's Islamic Cultural Center Jakarta "Al-Huda"⁴² instead is taking care of Iran's 'Islamic interests' in the country. This at least might come to one's mind after having seen its impressive building. The Center publishes also a journal in Indonesian, Al-Huda (Guidance). Jalaluddin Rakhmat, whom we encountered earlier, is one of the leading members of the Centers organizing committee. Moreover, from a glance at the names of the Center's officials mentioned on the website, it appears that a considerable number of them belongs Indonesian-Arab community. This is indeed remarkable when one remembers what has been said earlier in connection with the activities of Al-Sayyid Muhammad b. al-'Aqīl al-Hadhramī on persistent latent Shi'ite tendencies among parts of the Southeast Asian Arab community in the early 20th century.⁴³

Interestingly, with regard to the recent developments seems to be the publication sector and numerous Shi'ite publishing houses exist in the country, the most important among them being Pustaka Hidayah, Mizan, Lentera, and YAPI Jakarta, and by February 2001, 373 books on Shi'ite-related subjects had been published Indonesian language by 59 different Indonesian publishers.⁴⁴ As literature in Malay on Shi'ism published in Malaysia remains rather limited to the polemical writings of those in opposition to it, publications in Indonesian language take also the prominent place of a major source for Malay-speaking Muslims in Singapore and Malaysia. Organizations such as Yayasan Fatimah and others are noteworthy for their wide range of distributed Shi'ite literature, often available online. Shi'ite Indonesians are often well-educated and many of them are university graduates. However, given the vastness of the Indonesian territory and the scattered minority situation of the Shi'ites throughout the country their influence on the rest of the Muslim community remains to be seen.

⁴¹ See "Embassy of the Islamic Republic of Iran, Jakarta," available online at <http://www.iranembassy.or.id/> (accessed on July, 2006).

⁴² See "Islamic Cultural Center Jakarta 'Al-Huda'", available online at <http://www.icc-jakarta.com/> (accessed on July 5, 2006).

⁴³ The issue of Al-Sayyid Muhammad b. al-'Aqīl al-Hadhramī, a major figure of the early 20th-century, shall be referred to again in the sequel to this article.

⁴⁴ See M. Safwan, "Ikatan Jamaah AhlulBait Indonesia sebagai Gerakan Sosial-Keagamaan," (Ikatan Jamaah AhlulBait Indonesia as a socio-political movement) (in Indonesian), available online at http://raushanfikir.tripod.commakatul/sosio_agama.htm (accessed on July 6, 2006).

IDSS Working Paper Series

1. Vietnam-China Relations Since The End of The Cold War (1998)
Ang Cheng Guan
2. Multilateral Security Cooperation in the Asia-Pacific Region: Prospects and Possibilities (1999)
Desmond Ball
3. Reordering Asia: “Cooperative Security” or Concert of Powers? (1999)
Amitav Acharya
4. The South China Sea Dispute re-visited (1999)
Ang Cheng Guan
5. Continuity and Change In Malaysian Politics: Assessing the Buildup to the 1999-2000 General Elections (1999)
Joseph Liow Chin Yong
6. ‘Humanitarian Intervention in Kosovo’ as Justified, Executed and Mediated by NATO: Strategic Lessons for Singapore (2000)
Kumar Ramakrishna
7. Taiwan’s Future: Mongolia or Tibet? (2001)
Chien-peng (C.P.) Chung
8. Asia-Pacific Diplomacies: Reading Discontinuity in Late-Modern Diplomatic Practice (2001)
Tan See Seng
9. Framing “South Asia”: Whose Imagined Region? (2001)
Sinderpal Singh
10. Explaining Indonesia's Relations with Singapore During the New Order Period: The Case of Regime Maintenance and Foreign Policy (2001)
Terence Lee Chek Liang
11. Human Security: Discourse, Statecraft, Emancipation (2001)
Tan See Seng
12. Globalization and its Implications for Southeast Asian Security: A Vietnamese Perspective (2001)
Nguyen Phuong Binh
13. Framework for Autonomy in Southeast Asia’s Plural Societies (2001)
Miriam Coronel Ferrer
14. Burma: Protracted Conflict, Governance and Non-Traditional Security Issues (2001)
Ananda Rajah
15. Natural Resources Management and Environmental Security in Southeast Asia: Case Study of Clean Water Supplies in Singapore (2001)
Kog Yue Choong
16. Crisis and Transformation: ASEAN in the New Era (2001)
Etel Solingen
17. Human Security: East Versus West? (2001)
Amitav Acharya
18. Asian Developing Countries and the Next Round of WTO Negotiations (2001)
Barry Desker

19. Multilateralism, Neo-liberalism and Security in Asia: The Role of the Asia Pacific Economic Co-operation Forum (2001)
Ian Taylor
20. Humanitarian Intervention and Peacekeeping as Issues for Asia-Pacific Security (2001)
Derek McDougall
21. Comprehensive Security: The South Asian Case (2002)
S.D. Muni
22. The Evolution of China's Maritime Combat Doctrines and Models: 1949-2001 (2002)
You Ji
23. The Concept of Security Before and After September 11 (2002)
 - a. The Contested Concept of Security
Steve Smith
 - b. Security and Security Studies After September 11: Some Preliminary Reflections
Amitav Acharya
24. Democratisation In South Korea And Taiwan: The Effect Of Social Division On Inter-Korean and Cross-Strait Relations (2002)
Chien-peng (C.P.) Chung
25. Understanding Financial Globalisation (2002)
Andrew Walter
26. 9/11, American Praetorian Unilateralism and the Impact on State-Society Relations in Southeast Asia (2002)
Kumar Ramakrishna
27. Great Power Politics in Contemporary East Asia: Negotiating Multipolarity or Hegemony? (2002)
Tan See Seng
28. What Fear Hath Wrought: Missile Hysteria and The Writing of "America" (2002)
Tan See Seng
29. International Responses to Terrorism: The Limits and Possibilities of Legal Control of Terrorism by Regional Arrangement with Particular Reference to ASEAN (2002)
Ong Yen Nee
30. Reconceptualizing the PLA Navy in Post – Mao China: Functions, Warfare, Arms, and Organization (2002)
Nan Li
31. Attempting Developmental Regionalism Through AFTA: The Domestic Politics – Domestic Capital Nexus (2002)
Helen E S Nesadurai
32. 11 September and China: Opportunities, Challenges, and Warfighting (2002)
Nan Li
33. Islam and Society in Southeast Asia after September 11 (2002)
Barry Desker
34. Hegemonic Constraints: The Implications of September 11 For American Power (2002)
Evelyn Goh
35. Not Yet All Aboard...But Already All At Sea Over Container Security Initiative (2002)
Irvin Lim

36. Financial Liberalization and Prudential Regulation in East Asia: Still Perverse? (2002)
Andrew Walter
37. Indonesia and The Washington Consensus (2002)
Premjith Sadasivan
38. The Political Economy of FDI Location: Why Don't Political Checks and Balances and Treaty Constraints Matter? (2002)
Andrew Walter
39. The Securitization of Transnational Crime in ASEAN (2002)
Ralf Emmers
40. Liquidity Support and The Financial Crisis: The Indonesian Experience (2002)
J Soedradjad Djiwandono
41. A UK Perspective on Defence Equipment Acquisition (2003)
David Kirkpatrick
42. Regionalisation of Peace in Asia: Experiences and Prospects of ASEAN, ARF and UN Partnership (2003)
Mely C. Anthony
43. The WTO In 2003: Structural Shifts, State-Of-Play And Prospects For The Doha Round (2003)
Razeen Sally
44. Seeking Security In The Dragon's Shadow: China and Southeast Asia In The Emerging Asian Order (2003)
Amitav Acharya
45. Deconstructing Political Islam In Malaysia: UMNO'S Response To PAS' Religio-Political Dialectic (2003)
Joseph Liow
46. The War On Terror And The Future of Indonesian Democracy (2003)
Tatik S. Hafidz
47. Examining The Role of Foreign Assistance in Security Sector Reforms: The Indonesian Case (2003)
Eduardo Lachica
48. Sovereignty and The Politics of Identity in International Relations (2003)
Adrian Kuah
49. Deconstructing Jihad; Southeast Asia Contexts (2003)
Patricia Martinez
50. The Correlates of Nationalism in Beijing Public Opinion (2003)
Alastair Iain Johnston
51. In Search of Suitable Positions' in the Asia Pacific: Negotiating the US-China Relationship and Regional Security (2003)
Evelyn Goh
52. American Unilateralism, Foreign Economic Policy and the 'Securitisation' of Globalisation (2003)
Richard Higgott

53. Fireball on the Water: Naval Force Protection-Projection, Coast Guarding, Customs Border Security & Multilateral Cooperation in Rolling Back the Global Waves of Terror from the Sea (2003)
Irvin Lim
54. Revisiting Responses To Power Preponderance: Going Beyond The Balancing-Bandwagoning Dichotomy (2003)
Chong Ja Ian
55. Pre-emption and Prevention: An Ethical and Legal Critique of the Bush Doctrine and Anticipatory Use of Force In Defence of the State (2003)
Malcolm Brailey
56. The Indo-Chinese Enlargement of ASEAN: Implications for Regional Economic Integration (2003)
Helen E S Nesadurai
57. The Advent of a New Way of War: Theory and Practice of Effects Based Operation (2003)
Joshua Ho
58. Critical Mass: Weighing in on Force Transformation & Speed Kills Post-Operation Iraqi Freedom (2004)
Irvin Lim
59. Force Modernisation Trends in Southeast Asia (2004)
Andrew Tan
60. Testing Alternative Responses to Power Preponderance: Buffering, Binding, Bonding and Beleaguering in the Real World (2004)
Chong Ja Ian
61. Outlook on the Indonesian Parliamentary Election 2004 (2004)
Irman G. Lanti
62. Globalization and Non-Traditional Security Issues: A Study of Human and Drug Trafficking in East Asia (2004)
Ralf Emmers
63. Outlook for Malaysia's 11th General Election (2004)
Joseph Liow
64. Not Many Jobs Take a Whole Army: Special Operations Forces and The Revolution in Military Affairs. (2004)
Malcolm Brailey
65. Technological Globalisation and Regional Security in East Asia (2004)
J.D. Kenneth Boutin
66. UAVs/UCAVS – Missions, Challenges, and Strategic Implications for Small and Medium Powers (2004)
Manjeet Singh Pardesi
67. Singapore's Reaction to Rising China: Deep Engagement and Strategic Adjustment (2004)
Evelyn Goh
68. The Shifting Of Maritime Power And The Implications For Maritime Security In East Asia (2004)
Joshua Ho
69. China In The Mekong River Basin: The Regional Security Implications of Resource Development On The Lancang Jiang (2004)
Evelyn Goh

70. Examining the Defence Industrialization-Economic Growth Relationship: The Case of Singapore (2004)
Adrian Kuah and Bernard Loo
71. “Constructing” The Jemaah Islamiyah Terrorist: A Preliminary Inquiry (2004)
Kumar Ramakrishna
72. Malaysia and The United States: Rejecting Dominance, Embracing Engagement (2004)
Helen E S Nesadurai
73. The Indonesian Military as a Professional Organization: Criteria and Ramifications for Reform (2005)
John Bradford
74. Maritime Terrorism in Southeast Asia: A Risk Assessment (2005)
Catherine Zara Raymond
75. Southeast Asian Maritime Security In The Age Of Terror: Threats, Opportunity, And Charting The Course Forward (2005)
John Bradford
76. Deducing India’s Grand Strategy of Regional Hegemony from Historical and Conceptual Perspectives (2005)
Manjeet Singh Pardesi
77. Towards Better Peace Processes: A Comparative Study of Attempts to Broker Peace with MNLF and GAM (2005)
S P Harish
78. Multilateralism, Sovereignty and Normative Change in World Politics (2005)
Amitav Acharya
79. The State and Religious Institutions in Muslim Societies (2005)
Riaz Hassan
80. On Being Religious: Patterns of Religious Commitment in Muslim Societies (2005)
Riaz Hassan
81. The Security of Regional Sea Lanes (2005)
Joshua Ho
82. Civil-Military Relationship and Reform in the Defence Industry (2005)
Arthur S Ding
83. How Bargaining Alters Outcomes: Bilateral Trade Negotiations and Bargaining Strategies (2005)
Deborah Elms
84. Great Powers and Southeast Asian Regional Security Strategies: Omni-enmeshment, Balancing and Hierarchical Order (2005)
Evelyn Goh
85. Global Jihad, Sectarianism and The Madrassahs in Pakistan (2005)
Ali Riaz
86. Autobiography, Politics and Ideology in Sayyid Qutb’s Reading of the Qur’an (2005)
Umej Bhatia
87. Maritime Disputes in the South China Sea: Strategic and Diplomatic Status Quo (2005)
Ralf Emmers

88. China's Political Commissars and Commanders: Trends & Dynamics (2005)
Srikanth Kondapalli
89. Piracy in Southeast Asia New Trends, Issues and Responses (2005)
Catherine Zara Raymond
90. Geopolitics, Grand Strategy and the Bush Doctrine (2005)
Simon Dalby
91. Local Elections and Democracy in Indonesia: The Case of the Riau Archipelago (2005)
Nankyung Choi
92. The Impact of RMA on Conventional Deterrence: A Theoretical Analysis (2005)
Manjeet Singh Pardesi
93. Africa and the Challenge of Globalisation (2005)
Jeffrey Herbst
94. The East Asian Experience: The Poverty of 'Picking Winners' (2005)
Barry Desker and Deborah Elms
95. Bandung And The Political Economy Of North-South Relations: Sowing The Seeds For Revisioning International Society (2005)
Helen E S Nesadurai
96. Re-conceptualising the Military-Industrial Complex: A General Systems Theory Approach (2005)
Adrian Kuah
97. Food Security and the Threat From Within: Rice Policy Reforms in the Philippines (2006)
Bruce Tolentino
98. Non-Traditional Security Issues: Securitisation of Transnational Crime in Asia (2006)
James Laki
99. Securitizing/Desecuritizing the Filipinos' 'Outward Migration Issue' in the Philippines' Relations with Other Asian Governments (2006)
José N. Franco, Jr.
100. Securitization Of Illegal Migration of Bangladeshis To India (2006)
Josy Joseph
101. Environmental Management and Conflict in Southeast Asia – Land Reclamation and its Political Impact (2006)
Kog Yue-Choong
102. Securitizing border-crossing: The case of marginalized stateless minorities in the Thai-Burma Borderlands (2006)
Mika Toyota
103. The Incidence of Corruption in India: Is the Neglect of Governance Endangering Human Security in South Asia? (2006)
Shabnam Mallick and Rajarshi Sen
104. The LTTE's Online Network and its Implications for Regional Security (2006)
Shyam Tekwani
105. The Korean War June-October 1950: Inchon and Stalin In The "Trigger Vs Justification" Debate (2006)
Tan Kwoh Jack

- 106 International Regime Building in Southeast Asia: ASEAN Cooperation against the Illicit Trafficking and Abuse of Drugs (2006)
Ralf Emmers
- 107 Changing Conflict Identities: The case of the Southern Thailand Discord (2006)
S P Harish
- 108 Myanmar and the Argument for Engagement: A Clash of Contending Moralities? (2006)
Christopher B Roberts
- 109 TEMPORAL DOMINANCE (2006)
Military Transformation and the Time Dimension of Strategy
Edwin Seah
- 110 Globalization and Military-Industrial Transformation in South Asia: An Historical Perspective (2006)
Emrys Chew
- 111 UNCLOS and its Limitations as the Foundation for a Regional Maritime Security Regime (2006)
Sam Bateman
- 112 Freedom and Control Networks in Military Environments (2006)
Paul T Mitchell
- 113 Rewriting Indonesian History The Future in Indonesia's Past (2006)
Kwa Chong Guan
- 114 Twelver Shi'ite Islam: Conceptual and Practical Aspects (2006)
Christoph Marcinkowski
- 115 Islam, State and Modernity : Muslim Political Discourse in Late 19th and Early 20th century India (2006)
Iqbal Singh Sevea
- 116 'Voice of the Malayan Revolution': The Communist Party of Malaya's Struggle for Hearts and Minds in the 'Second Malayan Emergency' (1969-1975) (2006)
Ong Wei Chong
- 117 "From Counter-Society to Counter-State: Jemaah Islamiyah According to PUPJI" (2006)
Elena Pavlova
- 118 The Terrorist Threat to Singapore's Land Transportation Infrastructure: A Preliminary Enquiry (2006)
Adam Dolnik
- 119 The Many Faces of Political Islam (2006)
Mohammed Ayoob
- 120 Facets of Shi'ite Islam in Contemporary Southeast Asia (I): Thailand and Indonesia (2006)
Christoph Marcinkowski